Course Description

An analysis of globalization as seen from the perspective of the historical developments that have shaped the evolution of the contemporary global economy. Particular attention is devoted to the leadership role which the United States has played in regard to building a liberal international economic order and the impact that globalization has had in the areas of international trade, national economic development, democratization, the environment and human rights. The course also examines the role which global economic forces and domestic economic policy choices are having in regard to the wages, benefits and job security of American workers.

PSC 211 is a three credit course which serves as an introduction to the subject of economic globalization and its impact in the United States and elsewhere. Hence, there are no prerequisites for the course and the instructor assumes that students possess little, if any, formal background in regard to this subject. Within the context of the general education curriculum, PSC 211 has been designated as both a Writing-Intensive course and a Global Studies offering.

Learning Objectives

Upon completion of the course, students will have demonstrated the following the skills and aptitudes:

1. The ability to describe the key intellectual, political, economic and technological developments that led to the contemporary era of globalization.
2. The ability to explain how participation in the global trade regime influences the formulation and implementation of U.S. foreign trade laws and regulations.
3. The ability to interpret and apply empirical evidence pertaining to the impact that global economic forces are having in regard to the process of national political, economic and social development.
4. The ability to use empirical evidence to compare and contrast the impact that global economic forces and domestic policy choices are having in regard to the wages, benefits and job security of workers in the United States.
5. The ability to write analytical essays which discuss global and national economic issues using the norms and conventions that characterize the field of global political economy.

Assessment

Student performance in regard to the learning objectives will be evaluated on the basis of a student's level of engagement in the class and a student's performance on three take-home exercises. There will not be a final exam in this course. Student must earn a grade of C or better in the course in order for it to count toward fulfillment of the Political Science major or general education requirements.

Class engagement will be evaluated on the basis of a rubric focusing upon a student's preparation for each class as indicated by the quality of a student's contributions to class discussions. In preparation for each class, students are expected to complete the required readings, guided by the discussion questions assigned by the instructor. Students are expected to bring the text to each class and to be prepared to discuss the issues raised by the discussion questions.

Students are permitted to supplement their in-class contributions by submitting written responses to discussion questions on a weekly basis. However, written submissions are not intended to be a substitute for active and engaged participation in the classroom. Such submissions must be typed, single spaced, paginated and stapled together. Citations should be provided as appropriate. Submissions will be reviewed, but not graded, by the instructor.

Tutorial assistance available through the Writing Center can be used for this purpose. Revisions should be submitted within two weeks from the date the exercises were returned to students. Revisions should be submitted electronically via e-mail as a Word attachment with all corrections noted in boldface. Generally, resubmissions will result in a half-letter grade increase in regard to content. However, a significant revision of the entire submission may result in a full-letter grade increase in regard to content. This determination will be made on a case-by-case basis by the instructor and students will be notified of the decision.

Plagiarism is a legally punishable offense, a serious breach of academic and professional ethics, as well as an egregious violation of the college’s Honor Code. Documented cases of plagiarism will result in a grade of “zero” for the assignment in question.

Class Conduct

To maintain an environment conducive to learning, everyone is expected to arrive on time for class, act with respect toward other students and refrain from behavior that could serve to disrupt the class or infringe upon the rights of other members of the class. Students also are expected to abide by the letter and spirit of the college’s Honor Code. The instructor will adhere to the Code of Ethics established by the American Political Science Association as these principles relate to a faculty member’s responsibilities in the classroom and to students more generally. Given the nature of this course, the instructor is mindful of his obligation:

- To not impose partisan views, conventional or otherwise, upon students.
- To faithfully represent the normative values, policy positions, and academic work of others.
- To respect and defend the intellectual freedom and procedural rights of students.
- To evaluate the performance of students equitably on the basis of criteria which are applied uniformly and in a nondiscriminatory fashion.

Students with documented disabilities who may need academic accommodations should discuss these needs with the instructor during the first week of classes. Students with disabilities who wish to request accommodations within the context of federal disability laws should contact the Advising Center. Students wishing to arrange an incomplete for the course should discuss this option with the instructor prior to the end of the semester.
